From Theodore Marmor : Why are Some People Healthy and Others Not? (Social Institutions and Social Change) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Why are Some People Healthy and Others Not? (Social Institutions and Social Change):

Each topical chapter in this volume crystallizes the findings of a five-year study, under the auspices of the Population Health Program of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, that probed the links between social hierarchy, the macroenvironmental factors in illness patterns, the quality of the microenvironmental, and other determinants of health. In its aggregate, this volume will prove essential to an understanding of the underlying public health issues for the next several decades.
